A CONCERT FEATURING WORKS OF SINGAPORE COMPOSERS

DR. BERNARD TAN

Dr Bernard Tan Tiong Gie was born in Singapore in 1943 and studied piano with Arthur Tan Hoay Teck, Lee Seok Mui, Lin Kwa Eng, Benjamin Khoo and Douglas Tan. He was Acting Head of the Department of Music at the University of Singapore in 1977 - 1978 and is currently Associate Director of the Centre for Musical Activities at the National University of Singapore. His works include "My Country and My People", a setting of Lee Tzu Pheng's poem for mixed chorus and piano; the incidental music for Robert Yeo's play "One Year Back Home" written for clarinet and piano; "Sinfonietta" for string orchestra, written for the Asian Composers' League Conference in Singapore in 1983; "O for a thousand tongues to sing," a setting of Charles Wesley's hymn commissioned by the United Methodist Choir to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Methodist Church in Singapore in 1986; "Little Things", a setting of Geraldine Heng's poem for mixed chorus and piano, commissioned by the Methodist Boys' Choir; the music for the ballet "Conflict" based on Garcia Lorca's "The House of Bernardo Alba", choreographed by Anthony Then and performed by the National Dance Company (Ballet Group) at the Singapore Arts Festival 1986; "Movement for Viola and Piano" written for Jiri Heger, principal violist of the Singapore Symphony Orchestra and premiered by him in 1986 and Sinfonietta No 2 commissioned by the Performing Rights Society and premiered in 1987 with Lim Yau conducting.

YENN CHWEN

Born in Singapore in 1965, Yenn Chwen began to learn the violin and piano at the age of six under Chan Ying Shing and Wok Pak Chuan respectively. He studied composition under Lee Teck Fah. Under Lee Teck Fah's guidance, he won the Best Award and Outstanding Performance Award in the Second Singapore Junior Original Concert (1976) with "Night Song" a work for violin and piano.

Yenn Chwen continued his studies in the Royal Academy of Music, London, when he was awarded a SSO scholarship. It was then he was exposed to 20th century music and began to compose under the guidance of Sarah Thomas. Several works were written during these years, including a sonata for violin and piano, a sonata for piano, a solo violin suite and some other shorter works.

Since his return, Yenn Chwen started to compose choral music. His cantata "An Unknown Evangelist" and a shorter work "Psalms 150" were performed by his church choir (Orchard Road Presbyterian Church) at the Victoria Concert Hall in August 1986.

Yenn Chwen is presently a first violinist in the SSO.

YEW TIEN

A prominent figure in the Singapore music scene, Phoon Yew Tien is the Assistant Conductor of the People's Association Chinese Orchestra. In 1980, he was awarded the Singapore Symphony Orchestra Scholarship and he graduated from the Queensland Conservatorium of Music in Brisbane (Australia) in 1983 with a double degree in Music Instrumental (Flute) and Music composition. Prior to his overseas training, Yew Tien had studied under Mr Leong Yoon Pin.

Yew Tien's compositions have bagged numerous awards; They include the prestigious Dulcie Robertson Prize (1980, 1981 and 1983) and the Yoshio Inno Memorial Prize (1984) awarded by the Asian Composers' League.

Locally, the Singapore Symphony Orchestra, Singapore Youth Orchestra and the People's Association Chinese Orchestra have commissioned Yew Tien to compose for their performances. He has also collaborated with various dance and drama groups and many of these works were featured in the Singapore Festival of Arts, Festival of Dance and the ASEAN Arts Festival. During this year's Festival of Arts, Yew Tien was commissioned to write a 1½ hours contemporary dance drama piece "Nu Wa" which was the opening item for the Festival. Yew Tien's "More on Singapore" was performed at the national day celebration in August 1988. In addition, Yew Tien's works have been performed by various orchestras in Hong Kong, Taiwan, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, England, France and Italy.

LEONG YOON PIN

Leong Yoon Pin has been a leading figure in the Singapore music scene for over twenty years. He received his music education at the Guildhall School of Music in London, gaining the AGSM and GGSM diplomas.

In 1960, Leong founded the Metro Philharmonic Society which has become one of Singapore's most active and prominent musical groups. The Society's choir and orchestra have given numerous public performances under his baton, including many premieres of his own compositions. Leong remains the Music Director and the driving force behind the Society.

Leong was also the first Resident Conductor of the Singapore National Orchestra established under the National Theatre Trust in 1969. The Singapore National Orchestra under him laid the foundation upon which government and public support for a fully professional orchestra could be built in later years.

Leong is perhaps best known as a composer - one of the small band of pioneers in Singapore striving to create music which reflects the ethos and aspirations of Singaporeans. He studied composition in France under the great teacher, Nadia Boulanger. In his compositions, Leong seeks to combine his natural Chinese idiom with contemporary technique.

He has numerous works to his credit - vocal, choral, instrumental and orchestral. He is the first Singaporean composer to have his work performed by the Singapore Symphony Orchestra. He has written two symphonies, the first of which has been performed by the SSO. In addition, he has received commissions from other bodies, such as the Ministry of Culture and the Singapore Youth Orchestra.

Having served as a member of the Faculty of the Institute of Education, Leong has contributed much to music education in Singapore by his work within and outside the Institute. He has written, arranged and edited numerous songs for educational use, which have enriched the musical curriculum of our schools. He has also served and is still serving in many other bodies, including the Ministry of Education's Choral Advisory Committee and the Management Committee of the Singapore Youth Orchestra under the auspices of the Ministry of Education.

In 1982, Leong is awarded the Cultural Medallion for his outstanding achievements and contributions to music.

TSAO CHIEH

Tsao Chieh studied piano with Victor Doggett and obtained his LRSM (pianoforte performance) in 1972, at the same time taking music privately at "A" level. In 1973, he was offered an SAF scholarship to the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology to pursue a degree in Electrical Engineering where he also obtained the IEE prize for academic excellence. During these years, he became keenly interested in music composition and listened to much recorded music, particularly of the twentieth-century. At that time, attempts at writing were hampered by a lack of technique, and after a stint in Signal school at Fort Gordon in Georgia, USA, he returned to work in the Ministry of Defence. Several years later, he was again offered a MINDEF scholarship to Stanford University to pursue a Doctorate in Electrical Engineering. The flexible curriculum there enabled him to simultaneously pursue music at first as an extra-curricular activity, then for a Master's degree. While at Stanford, he studied composition with Leland Smith, piano with Norman Scarrow and flute with Alexandra Hawley and Carol Adee. His work, "Four Songs from Romantic Poets for Soprano and Chamber Ensemble" (1965) won first prize in the Jean and Paul Hanna Music Composition competition organised at Stanford. While over there, he also completed "Singapore: Symphonic Suite for Large Orchestra" (1965) which was premiered by the SSO during the 1966 Arts Festival. More recently, he has completed "Stasis" (1987) which was premiered by the Singapore Youth Orchestra in Perth and Singapore, and "Two Poems of Edwin Thumboo for Narrator and Orchestra" (1987). Tsao Chieh currently heads the Defence Technology Department under the Chief Defence Scientist's office in MINDEF and has also published papers on the matrix quantization of linear-predictive-coded speech in the Transactions of the IEEE.

DR. BERNARD TAN

This work was written in May/June 1988 at the request of Chong Shoo Mei, trombonist with the Singapore Symphony Orchestra. Ms Chong wanted a suitable piece to play at a Trombone Workshop in Australia earlier this year. Only one movement of the work was performed in Australia, so this is the premiere of the complete work.

The Sonatina is in three short movements and is written in a direct and easily accessible style. The first movement, allegro ma non troppo, is a sprightly and cheerful sonata form with a brief development. There are two contrasting themes: the piquant principal theme heard at the beginning and a more lyrical, wide ranging second subject over a syncopated piano accompaniment. The short coda ends with the principal theme gently fading out. The pensive second movement, andante tranquillo, has been adapted from an interlude in the composer's music for the ballet "Conflict" choreographed by Anthony Then and presented by the National Dance Company (ballet group) in the 1986 Festival of Arts. The third movement, marked allegro spiritoso is highly spirited and energetic and barely gives the trombone and piano any respite, demanding from both players a bravura performance which culminates in a forceful ending.

OBSESSION

ER YENN CHWEN

Obsessed by four emotional elements, the work seeks to express these feelings musically.

- 1) Tension — The movement is built on a long-held C and short arpeggios with acute punctuations of fast rhythmic cells. The tension is created by the contrast of the serene long note and the first rhythmic figuration, intensified when the rhythmic figuration accelerates.
- 2) Joy — An exuberant dance rhythm is introduced by the violin and taken up by the other instruments leading to a timpani solo. The theme is first introduced on the violin and cello, and is passed onward. After this comes a slower section starting with flute and harp. After further developments, the movement returns once again to the first section.
- 3) Hauntings — This movement is in arch form. It starts with flute and clarinet soli with trumpet on a tone row. Immediately after, the violin, cello and piano hammer an aggressive section based on the previous tone row. This leads to a long section where a melody (first heard on the trumpet) is repeated and developed juxtaposing with the tone row (in the violin and cello). Both the melody and tone row grow and accelerate, culminating in the aggression section again. The movement ends with the flute and clarinet soli, as in the beginning.

- 4) Passion — Passion music is a musical setting of the text of the Passion according to one of the four Evangelists. The movement seeks to capture the spirit inherent in Passion music. The introduction of leaping octaves on the harp signifies the heavy footsteps of Christ while journeying towards Calvary. The next three sections remind one of Christ's threefold prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane. The first is introduced by cello and violin; the second by flute, clarinet and trumpet. Both times, the music becomes more and more agitated and agonizing but eventually subsides into a quiet and serene melody. In the third section, a new melody is heard on the lower register amidst the chaotic arpeggio on flute, clarinet and trumpet, signifying the tearing of the veil of the temple (cymbal clash) at the crucifixion. The movement ends with the chorale 'Heizich endt mich ver-langen'. One by one, themes from previous movements appear and all tension, joy and hauntings resolve harmoniously in the sublimity for the Passion.

VARIANTS ON 'KUAN SHAN YUE'

PHOOH YEW TIEN

"Kuan Shan Yue" is a well known piece of ancient music based on a poem by the famous Tang Dynasty poet Li Po. This piece consists of a theme and 6 variants.

The sections of the piece are as follows:

Theme, moderato
Employs the melody line of the original piece with additional "Klangfarbenmelodie" treatment — a kind of orchestration technique that colours every individual note in the melody.

Variant I, Andante
Further use of the "Klangfarbenmelodie" but with more emphasis on different combinations of instruments.

Transition, Allegro

Variant II, Allegro
The harmony in this movement is derived from the melody line of the theme with rhythmic dialogues between various instruments or groups of instruments.

Transition, Allegro

Variant III, Allegro
Continuation of the dialogue between different groups of instruments in an overlapping and more transparent aspect.

Variant IV, Piu meno mosso
An imitation of the "Chin" (an ancient Chinese instrument) playing, with sliding effects produced by various instruments and a prominent accelerated motif recurring as an interlink.

Variant V, Allegro non troppo
This variant uses the "pointillistic" technique, the density and texture is then changed gradually increasing the value volume of the notes toward the end of the section.

Variant VI, Allegro
The Finale further combines and develops various aspects of musicality of the previous sections.

LEONG YOON PIN

"Interfusion" is written for a quintet of piano, violin, viola, cello and double bass. Structurally it is based on four thematic materials, namely, a tonal serial broken up into different segments and developed, a freely conceived pentatonic interlude, followed by two harmonic serials developed from the original row with ornate decorations for each voice on its contrapuntal entry, and in conclusion, a minimalized treatment on four groups of tones derived from the opening.

VARIATIONS FOR CHAMBER ENSEMBLE

TSAO CHIEN

The Variations for Chamber Ensemble were written between May and September 1988. It was originally conceived as a sort of chamber concertino, where each instrument in the ensemble would be given a cadenza-like passage to play in a manner reminiscent of Big Band jazz where the principal in each instrumental group would improvise and display his prowess at his instrument in turn. The single movement work, however, was too short to be called a concertino and names like "obligatos" and "soliloquies" for chamber ensemble, all of which reflect the soloistic aspects of the work's conception, were tried and rejected. I eventually settled for the present title because the work can be construed as a set of continuous variations.

The work itself, however, sounds nothing like Big Band jazz and is not influenced by it save in outward form. Indeed, it is very loosely based on a tone-row announced by the flute in the second phrase of its opening solo, the first four notes of which form a motif of some importance. A climax is reached and a cadenza for solo cello follows. Other instruments gradually join in as the cello reminisces in its extreme high register above the treble staff. Mysterious melismata appear in the winds and these give way to a version for string quintet of the cello's melancholy song.

An extended variation with cor anglais obbligato follows. This strives towards a climax but eventually subsides in a frustrated duet for cello and cor anglais accompanied ominously by slow, repeated Cs on the chimes. A sustained chord in the strings leads to an improvised heterophony of pentatonic bird-calls on flute, clarinet and violin. This texture is maintained as the horn makes a dramatic entrance with a version of the flute's opening solo, punctuated by dissonant chords on chimes, piano, harp and strings. The horn obbligato becomes increasingly more complex and virtuosic and eventually reaches a climax over spasmodic entries in the percussion.

The trumpet now takes the stage along with the horn and trombone in a passage of rapid triple-tonguing accompanied by side-drum and convulsive interjections from strings and piano. This leads to a chordal variation for brass and woodwind with timpani obbligato. Here, the timpani are made to play a variant of the underlying tone-row, ending in pulsating fortissimo chords for the whole ensemble which soon disintegrate in a catharsis of controlled improvisation. The music dies away and the opening flute solo returns over an inverted pedal A, pianissimo in the harp and violins punctuated by disturbing piano clusters and water gong entries. The bass clarinet has the last word as the music fades away into silence.

Some unusual instrumental effects are also used in the piece, notably the water gongs, pitch-bending in the flute and various inside-the-piano effects.
