music vs physics

Born of the ever-increasing struggle between sound and science, Music Vs Physics generates music that thrives through the combination of beats and flowing melodies. Kick back with a chemical reaction of cinematic undertones bombarded with slacker beat electrons, fusing the perfect compound of sound.

paul T

A prolific producer/ music arranger/ songwriter, Paul is no stranger to the Singapore music scene. Having worked with some of the best studio engineers and musicians around the world, he has a wealth of experience that includes numerous awards for outstanding productions, an award-winning album and composing groundbreaking tracks that have appeared alongside major artists in international compilations.

Askii is the sonic brainchild of Adam Milburn. Letting the electronic vibe infiltrate the very fibre of dance music, he presents a vibrant hybrid termed "neo-retro electro", which uses the creative synergy of synths, samplers and drum machines. Applying big synths and cutting drums, Askii elevates the essence of the 80's sound and stirs things up with lots of hooks and lots of sound antics.

plutonic lab

Plutonic Lab aims to challenge the expectations of listeners with what HipHop can be as an international culture. The Plutonic Lab camp features many guests including the mad skills of DJ Selekt, dance hall MC, RuCL's Jamaican style party flow, to name a few. Mastermind Leigh Ryan hopes to bring to the people who thirst for something a little different as Plutonic Lab offers an alternative of concocted new flavours with their brand of futuristic HipHop.

livewire

Livewire's passion for electronic music stems from an incessant experimentation with old synths and sequencers. Exposure to a jungle mix track back in 1995 instantly got Livewire intrigued while the deep sub bass and frantic breakbeats served as irresistible influences. This gave rise to a constant experimentation with drum 'n' bass and breakbeat style tunes.

case

Ten years saw his evolvement from the trip hop genre of dark smoky beats and fashionable manic depressive angst to dance culture. His musical catharsis began early in school with his adolescent years haunted by Depeche Mode, The Cure and Kraftwerk's synthetic sound. Case's recent work reveals his desire to stay relevant and abreast of this digital era with several solo albums placed on the information superhighway.

A sibling team of two brothers with one electrifying sound. Dominic and Simon Wood are into the dance genre of Progressive House. Although much of Mimesis' time is spent writing and producing music, their passion really lies in performing in front of a crowd and it's their high energy live performance that have led them to play in some of Melbourne's top venues and festivals.

jason tan

A self-taught musician who started out in the early 80s, Jason is one of Singapore's pioneers in electronic music. Drawing influence from the synth sounds of Kraftwerk, OMD, Human League, New Order and Depeche Mode, Jason developed his flair as synth pop gave way to progressive dance and he carved his identity in pushing and breaking boundaries in the local music scene.

Skrooloose showcases sample-based, groove-oriented music offering an experience that is boundless in its pursuit for creating sonorous vibes high on breakbeats and weird sounds. From dark drum 'n' bass to chilled out trippy tracks, Skrooloose is unrestrained by rules but liberated through the sampled possibilities in a piece of music. Evident influences on the music include 60s R&B, 70s rock, 80s rap/metal and 90s dance.
